NSW Camp & Grading (John Taylor Branch):

We normally restrict the camp to 120 students; however, this time we had 138 people, which made it rather crowded. Nevertheless, we all squeezed in and it made for some tight classes first thing in the morning. It turned out to be a very cold camp with the temperature down to 7° in the morning and so we were unable to train outside, subsequently we had to split the classes up into grades. Fortunately the camp we use has a number of halls so it all worked out well with Shihan Gibbons, Sensei Volkerts and Cirillo filling in to take to lower grades. The Saturday night entertainment was as usual, very funny with some great and creative acts done by the students, it is amazing how they consistently come up with new and fresh acts for the night. The grading had 87 students, which consisted of 3 attempting Nidan and 11 attempting Shodan, naturally with so many student grading a huge number going for black belt grades the grading was full tension and pressure. As normal the Yudansha turned up in good numbers to help with the kumite and keep them honest in the fighting and as always did a great job of keeping the grading students on their toes. Nevertheless it went off without a hitch. As always most of the grades were attempting 4th Kyu and over, with a sprinkling of lesser grades... The results are as follows:

Work like an animal: Termites

You think the Burj Khalifa tower in Dubai, at 828m, is tall? It's but a molehill compared to the largest termite mounds, which have been known to be up to 9m tall. Given that a termite is around half a centimetre long, that equates to a Burj tower well over 3,000m high. The reason termites can build such astonishing structures is down to their organisation. Termite society is utterly rigid and whatever job you're born into is yours for life - no need to worry about being made redundant or not getting that promotion. Termite societies are vast and ordered and operate as a well-oiled machine. With the royalty at the top, the workers making food for everybody and the armoured soldiers standing ready to repel an ant invasion, termites have built a system where everyone knows their place and everything is done for the greater good of the colony. "Not only do termites in a mound protect the king and queen," says our expert, "they also protect one another. They almost act like a single super-machine organism. These are complex societies with every individual having an important role. There's no such thing as a lazy termite. In the case of bees, there are clones whose only function is to mate with the Queen. After they've done that they are killed by the workers because they would be a drain on resources. The equivalent would be people in offices and no one really knows what they do, so they're got rid of. HR can't recommend an actual cull, luckily, but weeding out the work-shy and running at optimum efficiency is something we'd all aim for. A business where everyone involved knows what they have to do every day to achieve a common goal (and no one ever throws a sickie) is one that can build great things. What termites can teach us: Large organisation need to work as one and this means clear leadership and a focused and well-defined sense of purpose. There's no room for dead wood. Business life June 2010
